BEHANCE CASE STUDY - 13 PANELS

What if a portfolio felt like opening a magazine?

Faye explores a different way to present creative work - through editorial layouts, deliberate typography, and the feeling of turning a printed page.

Less scrolling. More discovery.

01 MONOCHROME
Reflections remind us that what we see is just one perspective.

02 MAZES
Negative space isn't empty - it's room to breathe.

BODONI MODA × INTER

Aa

Hairlines against a plain voice.

03 TYPOGRAPHY
Didone display type does the talking; sans-serif keeps the rest quiet.

04 LIGHT & STONE
Built on permanence, shaped by light.

A rigid grid, an expressive page.

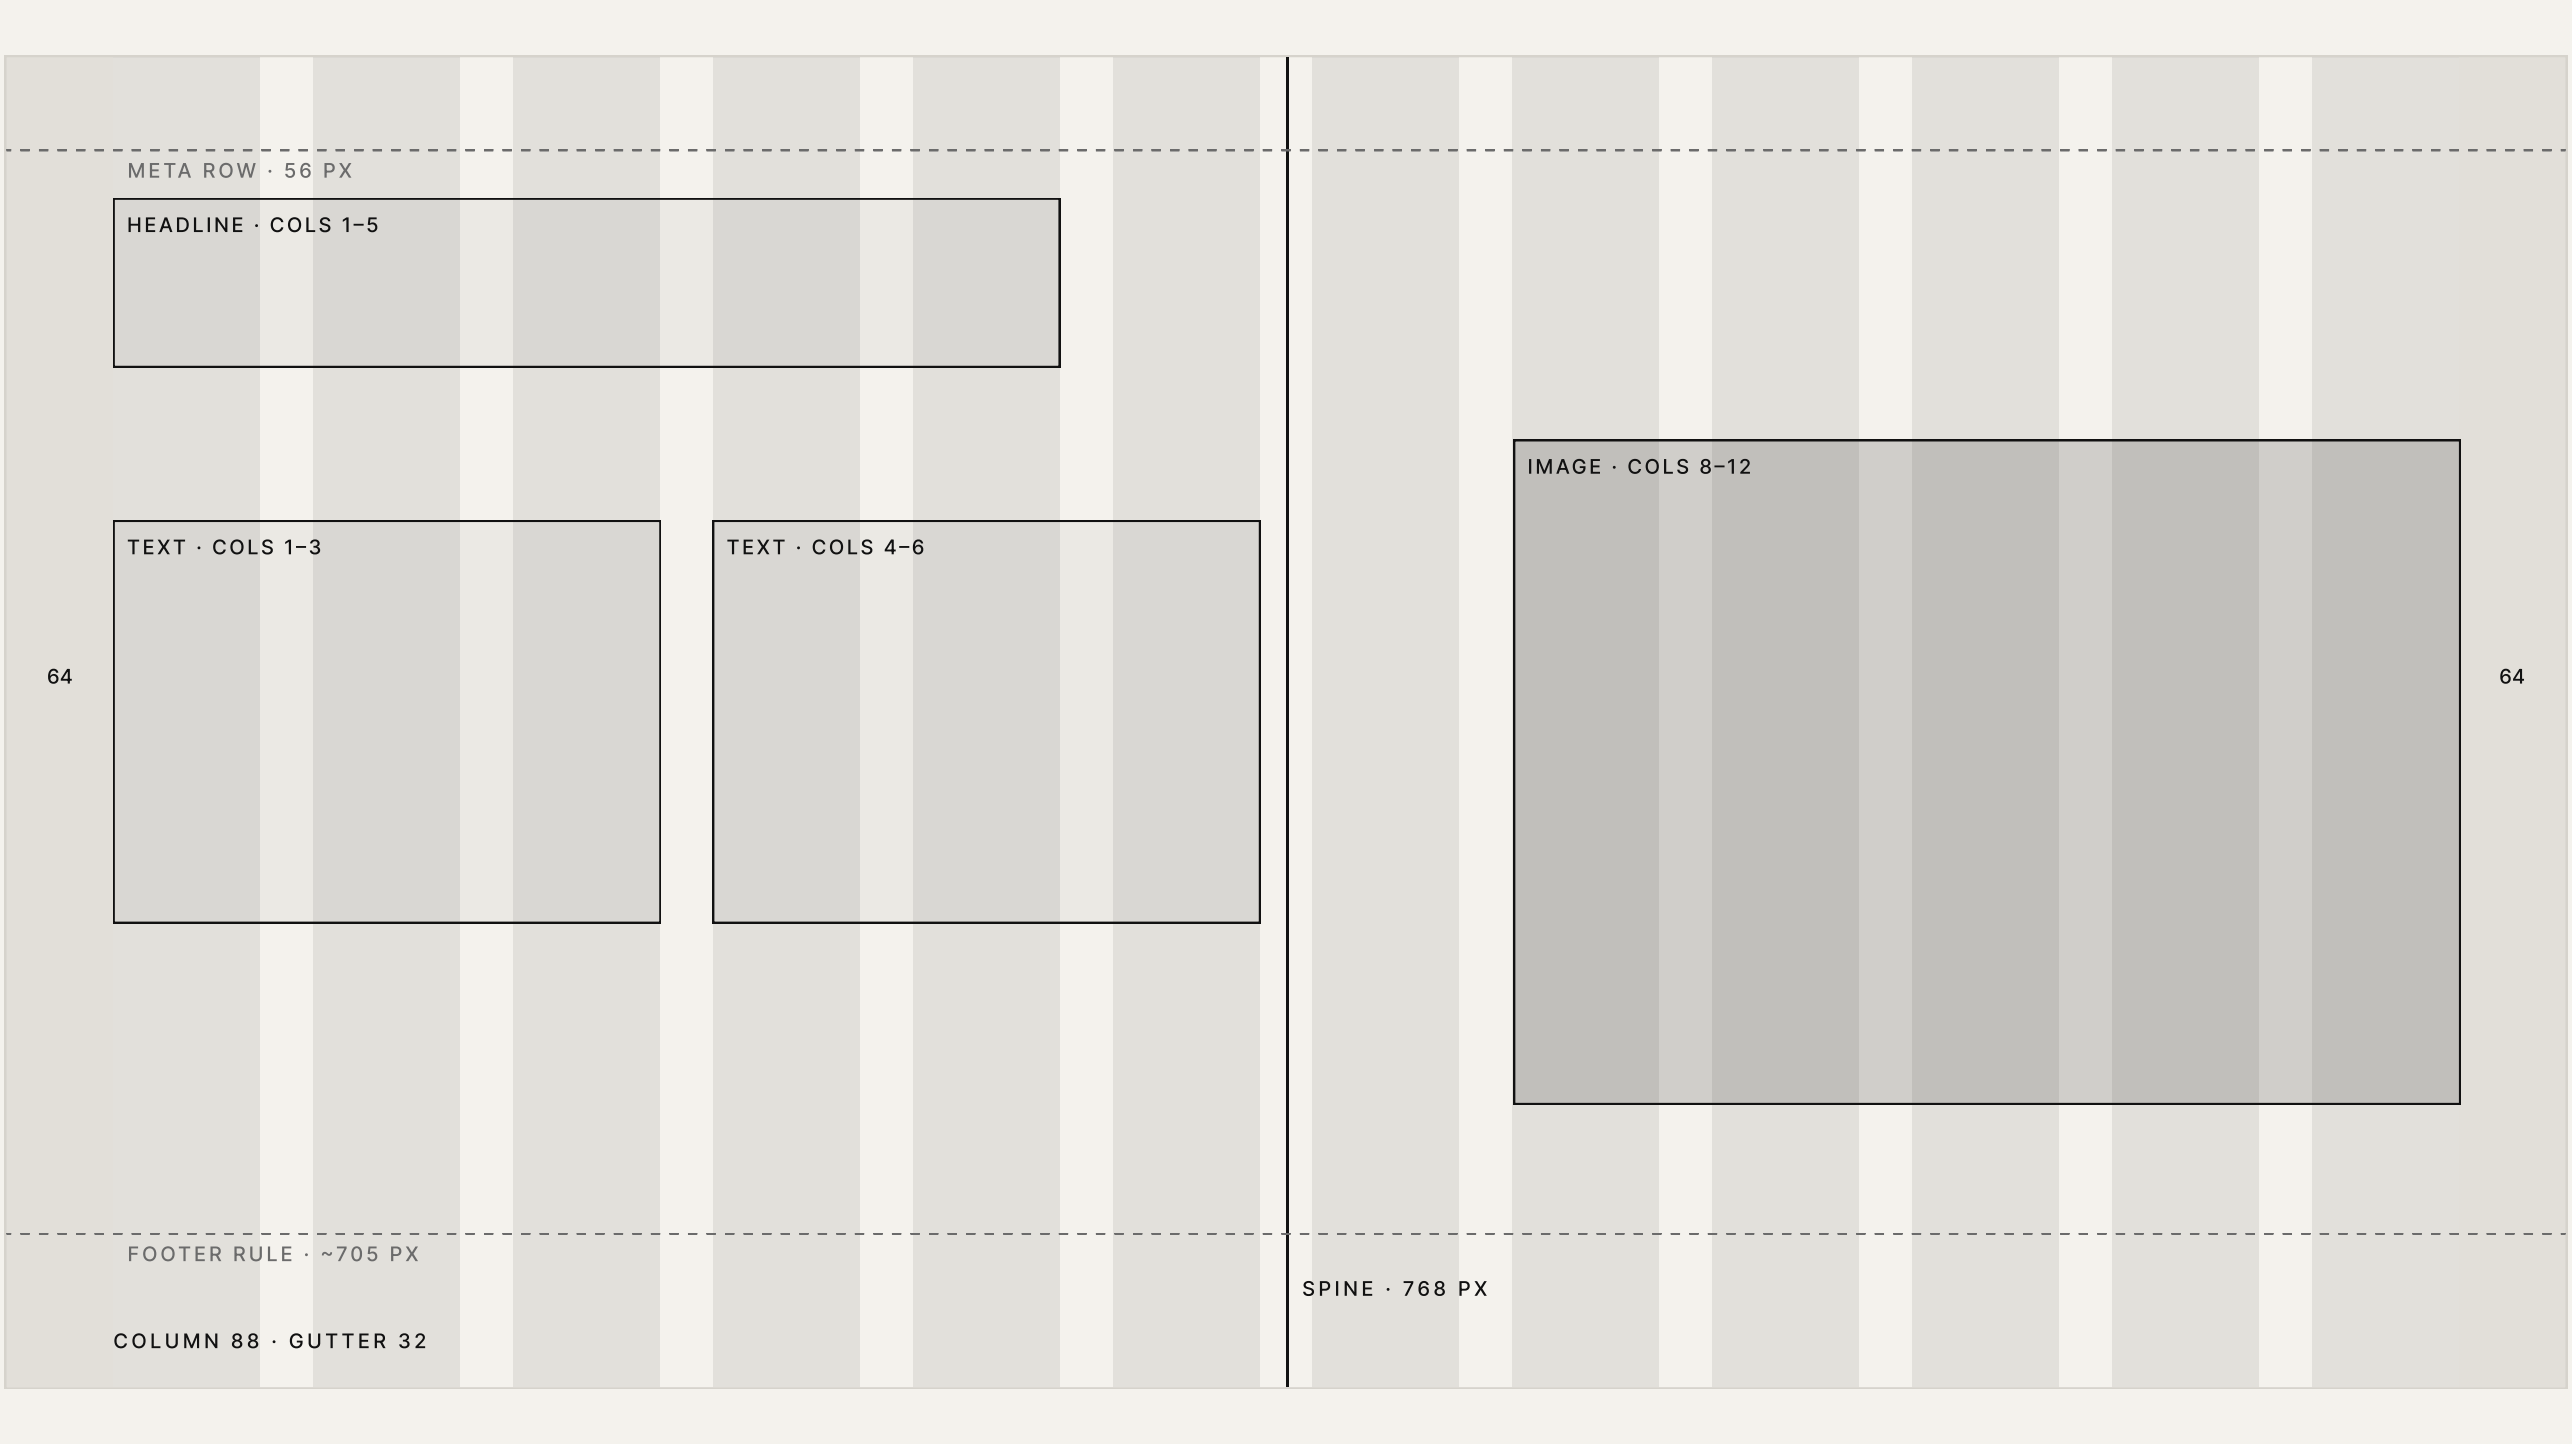
Every expressive move - a cropped headline, an off-centre photograph - sits on a fixed structure. Photographs are supplied project assets.

The grid.

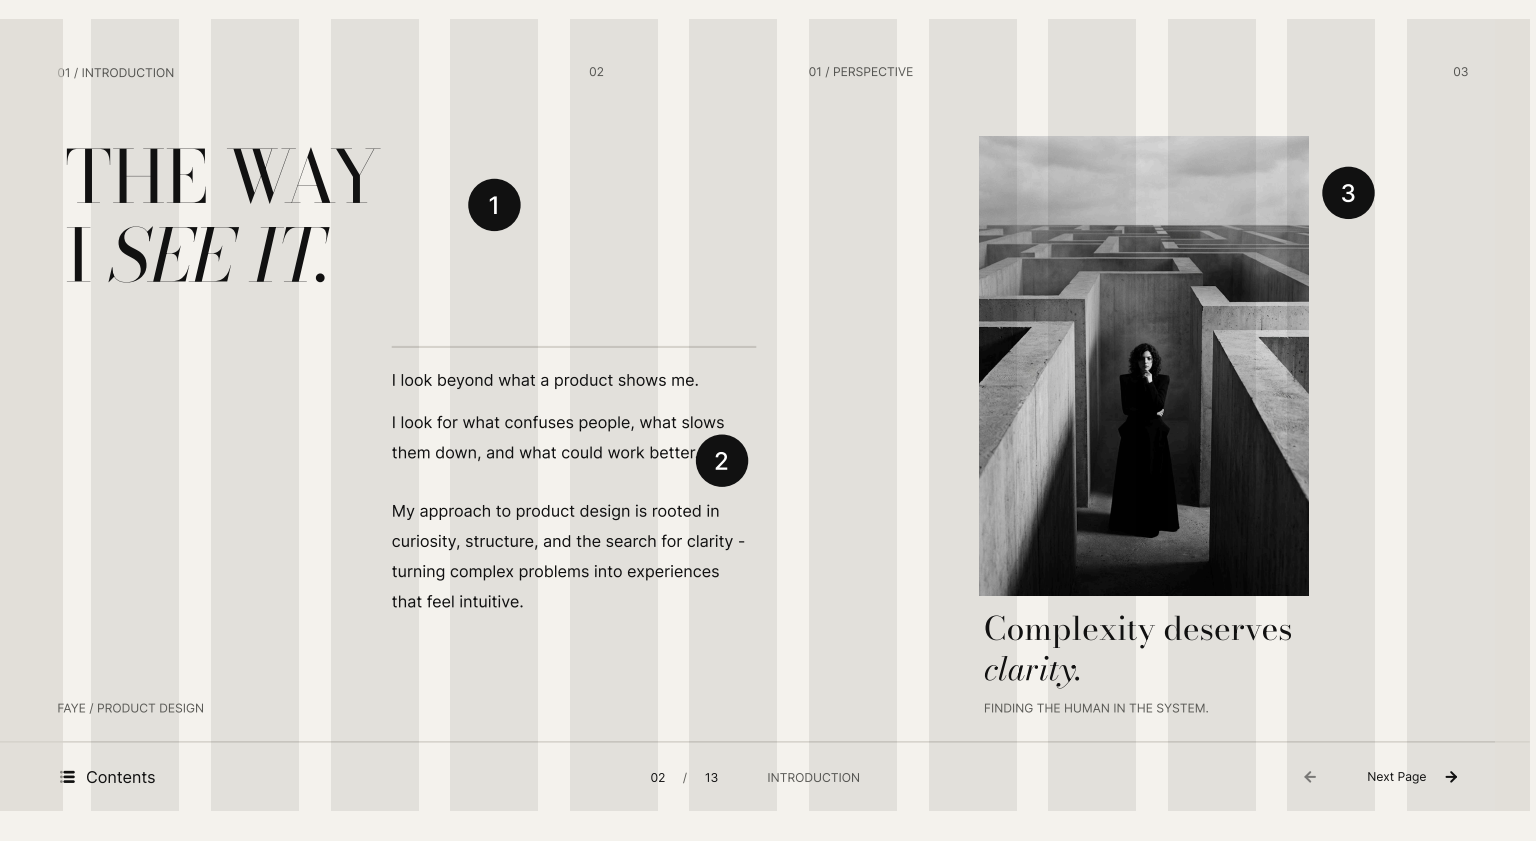
One spread grid on 64 px margins holds oversized headlines and quiet text blocks. The spine falls in the gutter between columns 6 and 7.



MEASURED
Margins 64 px, spine 768 px, page content 640 px, from 1536 px screenshots.

PROPOSED
12 columns, 32 px gutters, 88 px columns. Diagram drawn at 83% scale.

DESIGN SYSTEM
Spacing scale 8–64 px (s1–s6) and 1 px rules.



I look beyond what a product shows me.

I look for what confuses people, what slows them down, and what could work better.

My approach to product design is rooted in curiosity, structure, and the search for clarity - turning complex problems into experiences that feel intuitive.

A — STANDARD EDITORIAL LAYOUT

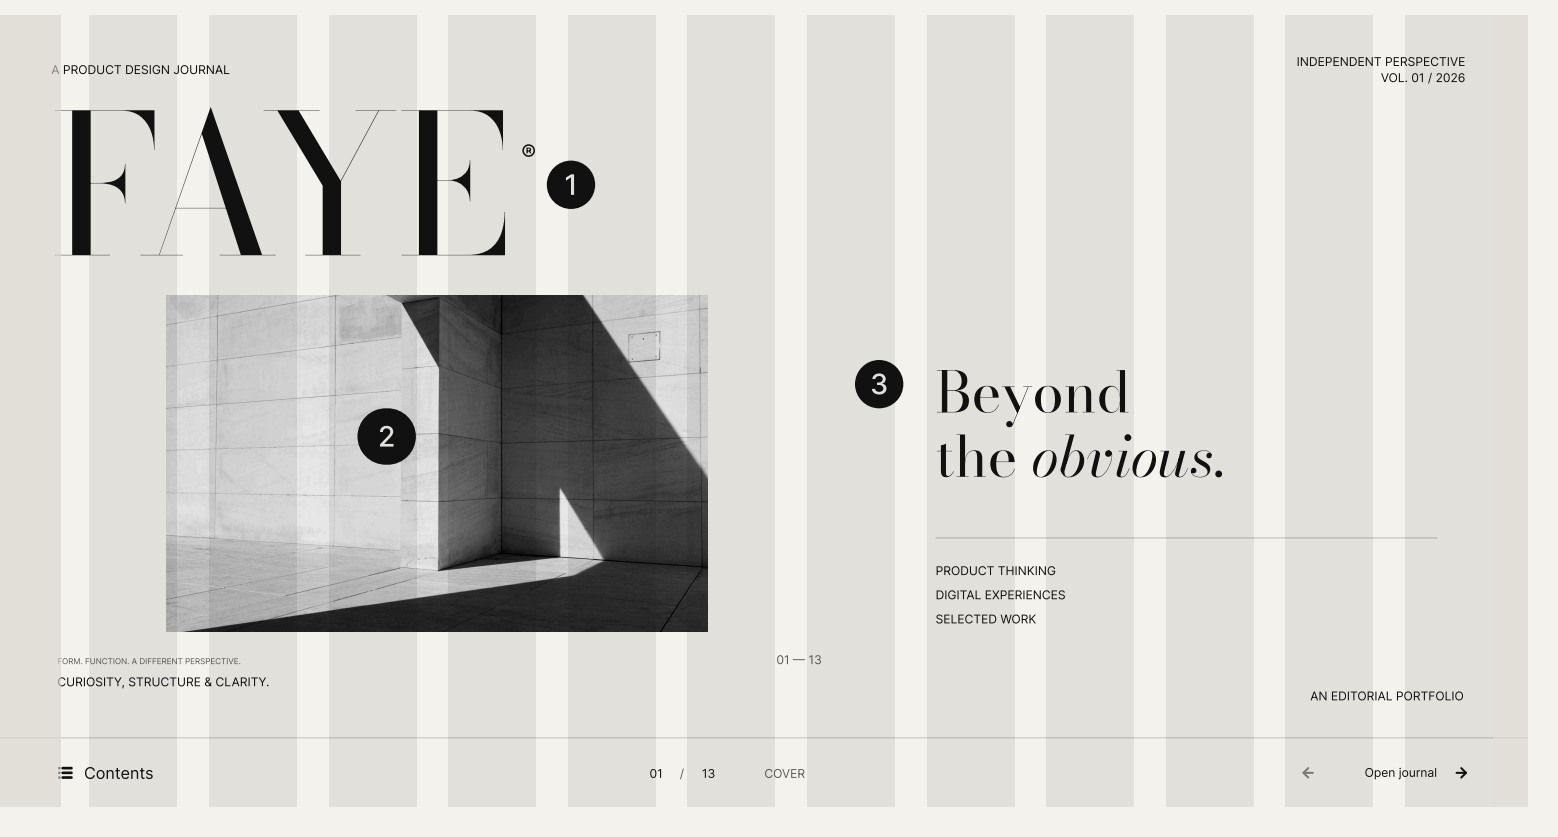
1 - Headline hangs from the left margin with open space beside it.

2 - Text sits in one narrow column, aligned to the page's inner edge.

3 - The image is inset from the right margin; caption and quote share its left edge.



B — ASYMMETRICAL LAYOUT

Oversized headline, offset image.

1 - The wordmark spans roughly the left third of the grid.

2 - The photograph is pushed off the left margin, creating tension with the wordmark.

3 - Tagline and index share one left edge in the right third.

The system.
